

Deterred

By: X Man

How It Began

In first grade, I participated in a writing competition.

I wrote a story about an eagle who had no friends.

I didn't win.

This was the start of an attribution of reading/ writing with competition and work.

"...this competitiveness can lead to hard feelings or outright ostracism. Some students mock other students for not earning enough points, or 'making us lose a class pizza party.'" - Mark Pennington

ACT I

X MAN
I did a bit of theatre from 14-18. Reading plays was more satisfying than a book. I loved the structure and pacing of the writing. Also, the font just looks so good!

Once the stage left, the texts stayed.

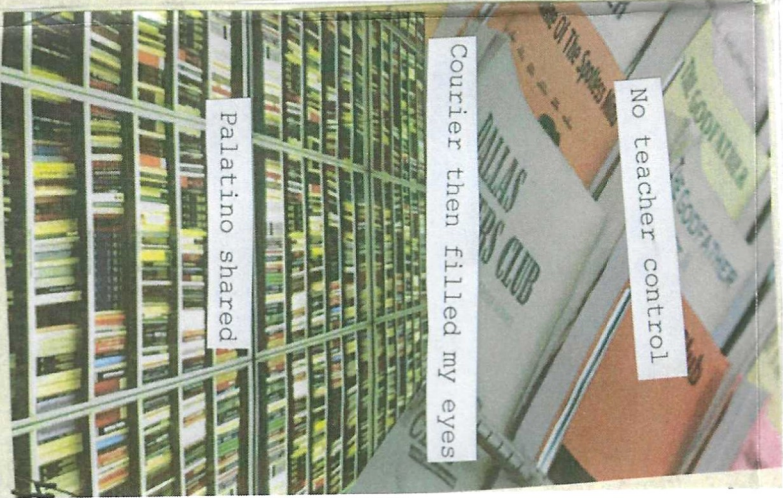

I added the words of film into the lineup.

The love increased.

Reading became more enjoyable than ever before.

Even for the books, that once deterred me.
